

To whom it may concern:I am concerned to discover that the FCC is considering limiting local oriented content on satellite radio providers such as XM. I am an XM customer and feel that XM provides greatly superior content to normal broadcast radio. I don't listen to broadcast radio at all because of very limited content, little variety and frequent commercial interruptions.

I feel that since XM is a subscription service there is no need to regulate it's content to limit local information. I am paying for the service and as customer a I can provide direct feedback to XM on what content I do and do not want on the service.

I urge the FCC to reject petition 04-160 put forth by the NAB and allow private subscription satellite radio providers like XM to determine their own content.

Respectfully,
Clay Turner
